

museum of arts and design

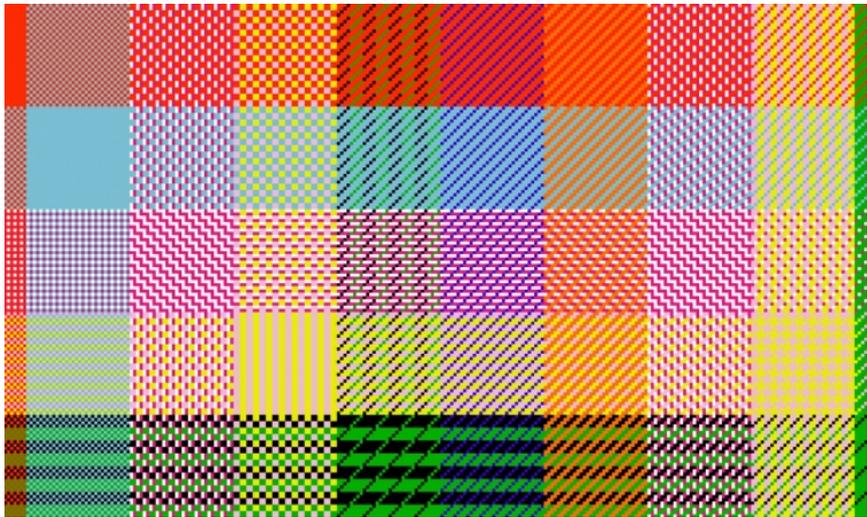

DIRECTIONS
CONTACT US
MAD IS CLOSED TODAY.

VISIT EXHIBITIONS PROGRAMS EDUCATION SUPPORT ABOUT OPPORTUNITIES STORE

Samantha Bittman: Interlace

1ST SITE

March 22, 2018 through September 6, 2018

1ST SITE

About the Exhibition

This spring, the Museum of Arts and Design launches 1ST SITE, a new project space located in the reception area of their 2 Columbus Circle location. 1ST SITE features work by artists and designers that interact with and interpret the interior architecture and ambiance of the "entry."

This spring, to coincide with the opening of Surface/Depth: The Decorative After Miriam Schapiro, the museum will feature Interlace, a large-scale vinyl mural by Brooklyn-based artist Samantha Bittman.

Interlace wraps the entry-level elevator bank in a colorful, oversize weaving draft—the pattern weavers follow to work out their designs in advance, dress their loom, and subsequently weave a piece of cloth. This particular weaving draft represents a "sample blanket," a textile that uses different warp and weft combinations in small sections in order to experiment with weave structures, yarn and color. Printed at this scale, the pattern is recognizable as a tool specific to textile work, while resembling the pixels associated with the digital.

The relationship between the handcrafted and the digital is a hallmark of Bittman's practice. The artist sets her hand-painted, hand-woven textiles against the backdrop of digitally printed wallpaper, for which she creates graphics using Photoshop. She sets the resolution of the wallpaper (pixels per inch) to the thread count of the painting that will hang on it, such that the wallpaper becomes an extension of the painting as well as a support, fusing weaving, painting, and graphics in a multilayered exploration of pattern.

By juxtaposing a very old practice with modern software, Bittman highlights their similarities. There is a sameness between the grid-based warp and weft interlacings of handwoven cloth and the pixelated Photoshop file, pointing to the ability of both mediums to embody pixel-based pictorial information.

Bittman's painting practice developed from an interest in the woven structure as picture. Working on a 12-harness floor loom, she weaves patterned textiles that she then stretches over a wooden frame before applying acrylic paint onto select threads. Matching the paint to the thread, she inverts the textile's pattern, merging thread and paint to create optical illusions with shape, line and pattern.

Referencing weavers and painters alike—from Anni Albers to Bridgett Riley—Bittman carves out a shared space between weaving and painting, drawing them together through an exploration of figure-ground.

Samantha Bittman is an artist and educator based in Brooklyn, NY. She has participated in residency programs at the Joseph and Anni Albers

Share

Like 36 Tweet

#1stsite

Part of the Exhibiton

Surface/Depth

The Decorative After Miriam Schapiro
March 22, 2018 to September 9, 2018

In June of 2015, Miriam Schapiro, the pioneering feminist artist and founding member of the Pattern and Decoration movement, passed away at the age of ninety-one. Surprisingly, given her status as the elder stateswoman of the feminist art movement, the...

Liz Collins: Rays

1ST SITE
September 20, 2018 to March 10, 2019

Liz Collins developed her "Rays" series (2015) during her 2015 residency in the Museum of Arts and Design's Artist Studios program. Originally composed as drawings on black craft paper, "Rays" was manufactured as the wallpaper panels Feria 1, ...

Collections

Did you know that over 95% of MAD's permanent collections is accessible online with high resolution images? Click here to see the collection.